Click to watch Gunday in HD.I'm certain that you've heard about Shpock: an email client for people who like to go through all their email on the toilet. Having written about it before, I've now had a chance to see it in action. I've been testing it out for a while now, so I'm going to offer you some notes and recommendations. I did a load of tests against Sparrow and Gmail, so you might be interested in that as well. The interface is slick, and you can get it running within just a couple of minutes. You don't need to have a fast computer or have any understanding of email; just give it a minute to load and it should all work for you. The main screen: It's actually a pretty good email client. It has a reasonably standard set of features, but most are handled pretty well. First of all, you'll be using the keyboard. You can type a message and hit a "send" button to send it. You can even get a nice animation (but it's quite fleeting) to show that you've sent the message. The main screen includes a "Inbox", which is a folder that you have to set up, and your "Saved" folder. You can have as many "Saved" folders as you want, and each of them are given their own categories. The "Inbox" folder includes some rather clever tricks. Most of the time, I don't want to be interrupted. I want to just get on with work and get some messages out there. So I have a "Work" folder in the Inbox folder, which looks like this: Notice that this screen only shows recent messages. At any point, you can expand the list to show more messages. You can quickly go back into "Work", expand it, and get more information about your messages. You can do the same thing to look up emails from a search bar. Shpock has a lot of other features as well. You can add people to email addresses. You can star 82157476af
